

Hey there, it's Brampton's turn to share what's going on again. It's our first week back after half term and we were all a bit groggy on Monday so it helped that we did something a bit different with our parliament day. We all felt a little intimidated by the subject at first as none of us really knew how politics worked and politicians always seem to argue on TV. However, once we found out how it worked, we realised that any of us could get involved in political issues if it was something that we felt strongly about.

The afternoon was even better as we had a chance to debate issues as a class. The teacher put us into different groups and we had some time to come up with ideas that supported our argument before we had a chance to compete with the other team, which was really exciting.

We have also been introduced to our new topic: space! We have been finding out how humanity's view on space has changed over our history. Did you know that people used to think that Earth was the centre of the universe?

Well, we are all feeling a bit tired as the end of the week approaches (it is the first week back after the holidays after all) but we are looking forward to finding out more about space and becoming astronomers.
